#HealthToo Story Submission Privacy Notice and Rules

Last Updated September 2, 2022

Women in Global Health Inc.’s #HealthToo platform and research project (the “Platform”) is designed for women health workers to anonymously share their stories (each, a “Story”) of and to create awareness of the existence and depth of work-related sexual exploitation, abuse, and harassment, and drive policy change. We understand that sharing information about unwanted sexual contact or sexual assault is difficult. We consider your privacy and security in every aspect of our Platform to ensure the anonymity of survivors, perpetrators and organizations. Here, we describe what information we request, how we use and share it, how we ensure anonymity, and rules you should follow for submission.

What We Ask

If you choose to share your Story using the Platform, you will be asked to share your age range, sex, country in which you work or worked at the time of the event, work position type, the type of organization for which you work or worked at the time of the event, and the details of your Story.

What You Provide Us

For all inputs other than your Story, we will ask you questions with a limited set of answers, for which you may—if you are willing—provide an answer. You are not required to provide a response to all of the questions to submit your Story.

Regarding your Story, you may choose to share as little or as much as you are comfortable with about the details of your Story. Please do not share sufficient personal or workplace information to identify you, your organization, any perpetrator, or any other individual when submitting your Story to us. If you include any such information in your Story submission, we will—at our discretion—delete and/or anonymize your Story.

What We Do With the Information You Submit

We predominately use the information you provide to us to provide the Platform: a place for women health workers who have experienced sexual exploitation, abuse and harassment to tell their Stories.

We may publish your anonymous Story on the Platform, our website, social media platforms, and/or blogs and articles.

We also use the information you provide us for advocacy and awareness purposes, including research, reports, resources and campaigns designed to create awareness on the existence and depth of work-related sexual exploitation, abuse, and harassment of women health workers in health care settings, drive policy change, and improve the safety of women health workers.

What We Retain
We will retain the information you provide to us in the form, for as long as necessary for the purposes outlined in this notice. Consistent with the above, we will not retain any information we believe may be used to identify a particular person. Further, we do not retain any internet or device-related identifiers in connection with your Story submission.

Contact Us

If you have any questions, you may contact us by email at the following address: info@womeningh.org However, please note that if you contact us in any way outside of this form, your information will be governed by our broader Women in Global Health Privacy Notice, available here.
